Cancer may sometimes come back after cancer drug treatment or radiotherapy. This can happen because the treatment didn't destroy all the cancer cells. Chemotherapy drugs kill cancer cells by attacking cells that are in the process of doubling to form 2 new cells. But not all the cells in a cancer divide at the same time.

Why some cancers come back | Cancer Research UK

Transurethral resection (TURBT) is typically the first treatment for these cancers, but it's done to help determine the extent (stage) of the cancer rather than to try to cure it. When the cancer has invaded the muscle, radical cystectomy (removal of the bladder) is the standard treatment. Lymph nodes near the bladder are often removed as well.
